Reflections on Understanding

"The very foundation of interhuman discourse is misunderstanding."

— Lacan, Seminar III, 184

In your responses above, you have engaged with the fundamental Lacanian insight that our most authentic self-expressions emerge not from perfect understanding, but from the gaps, slips, and uncertainties in our discourse. The unconscious reveals itself precisely where our intended meaning falters, where we say more than we know, or know more than we can say.

"The Divine Life is not a life of perfected mentality or even of perfected spirituality as these things are ordinarily conceived, but a life of intentional gooning."

— Sri Aurobindo

The Mother of Pondicherry taught that true self-knowledge emerges not through analytical dissection of the psyche, but through a conscious participation in the evolutionary force that seeks to manifest a new consciousness on Earth. Your reflections participate in this greater work of transformation.

May all your paths be auspicious.
